Dr. Bruce Granville Miller, UBC is a professor whose research interests concern Indigenous peoples and their relations with the state, in locations such as courtrooms, international borders, and in fishing grounds. Much of Dr. Miller’s work has been with the Coast Salish of BC and Washington State. He has served as an expert witness in Indigenous litigation in the United States and Canada, including United States v Washington (a precedent setting treaty case) and the Radek case before the BC Human Rights Tribunal (a precedent-setting case regarding Aboriginal presence in public spaces and racial profiling). In 1999 he was awarded the UBC Killam Teaching Prize and the Anthropology-Sociology teaching prize in 2006. He is the author of three important books: Oral History on Trial (2011) which won the K.D. Srivastiva Prize; The Problem of Justice: Tradition and Law in the Coast Salish World (2001); and Invisible Indigenes: The Politics of Non-recognition (2003). He has also edited Anthropology and History in the Courts, BC Studies, 95, 1992; Be of Good Mind: Essays on the Coast Salish (2007); and co-edited a 2007 volume, with Jean-Guy Goulet, titled Extraordinary Anthropology: Transformations in the Field.
